Confession solves campus mystery

Late one night, early in 1969, two other art students and I carefully removed the illuminated “S” from the Stout Tower. The “S” was mounted in the third floor window on the north side of the building and had been built with light bulb sockets attached to a couple of one by six planks. By 1969 it was showing its age. The planks were gray and weather beaten, and the light bulb sockets were very rusty. The whole thing sat crooked in the window and even when all the bulbs were working, they didn’t have a uniform illumination, probably due to years of being replaced by different types of bulbs. We thought of ourselves as Gorilla Artists on a mission to beautify the campus.

As the sun was coming up the next morning, we ceremoniously threw the “S” into the Red Cedar River off the Hudson Road Bridge and, as it floated into the distance, I thought, “Gone forever, no one will ever miss it.”

In 1969 the art students at UW-Stout were more likely to be singing Bob Dylan songs than the Stout Alma Mater, but two weeks later, a home economics major I knew who had once been an art student pointed out to me that the school song mentions the “S.” I read the lyrics and there it was “On the banks of Lake Menomin stands our Alma Mater true, with tower high and brilliant: “S”, for her we’ll dare and do.”

I was shocked.

Recently, I saw the article in the Stout Outlook about the new “S” and was moved by the story Hugh Moltzan told of seeing the original “S” through the fog when he was 13 years old, and how that gave him the incentive to acquire a higher education. For me, it was going to Stout for four years and the very supportive faculty that I encountered that gave me the incentive to keep going through life, even when times got tough. I realized this even more so when, about two years ago, I found the Stout Web cam on the Internet. From my desk in Los Angeles, I could watch a live picture of the Stout Tower. What a sight it was, an icon of memories over 100 years old, and still standing there looking better than ever with beautiful Midwestern sunsets behind it. The new “S” looks fabulous, and it gives me closure as much as anybody to see that the “S” was replaced.

They were friends through their college years at Stout. All graduated in 1955 with degrees in home economics education. Through the years, they kept each other aware of marriages, careers, children and grandchildren. They had only met four times — the last meeting 20 years ago. A picnic this summer in Baraboo brought them all back together.
